At this hour, upon the verandah of noble mansion, which reared its stately walls from a slight eminence on the banks of the Black Mingo, were seated two persons. The first was the daughter of the proprietor of the estate. As to her features, suffice it to say that the world called her beautiful. Her companion was a young man. His features were regular, and would have been called handsome, were it not for their smister expression. He was dressed in the complete uniform of his British majesty's service, he being a lieutenant in the army of the crown. The interview between the two was evidently embarrassing, for the countenances of both were flashed, and on the face of the maiden there lurked an expression of pain .-
